Brain Fog

BY LILLIAN RUSSELL.

Brain fog and insomnia are penalties nature is imposing upon a generation that is traveling all too fast. Youth fails to feel the effects of the dissipation of mental and physical strength. Sleep seems to bring complete recuperation. But when past the early miles of life the traveler with weary and tired muscles seeks sleep and rest only to find that the brain works on. He is a victim of insomnia.

Insomnia is the natural consequence of an abnormal mental strain, and usually a lack of muscular exercise. It falls alike to the lot of the strenuous business man and the victim of the social whirl. It prevails even when the body is tired and cries for rest. It is the enemy of nature's great blessing—sleep.

Yet this modern plague yields to simple treatment. A reliable prescription calls for the fair treatment of the brain. The man who works with his muscles in the open is rarely a victim of insomnia or ennui. It is for the other workers and the letters that the prescription must be written.

We all know that the essentials for a good night's sleep are mental repose, a requisite amount of muscular fatigue, comfort and a steady collar. An excellent plan, he says, "is to take a brisk half hour's walk just before bedtime, followed by a hot bath and rub-down, and then a cup of hot milk and a biscuit. Do not get into bed. If in addition the mind be focused on some pleasant, but not exciting topic, a night's rest is assured to all but the most chronic sufferer."

Bryan-Hamilton.

[Special to The Times-Dispatch.] BALTIMORE, MD., October 16.—One of the important weddings of the autumn will take place to-morrow, when Miss Grace Hamilton, daughter of Mrs. S. Marland Hamilton, will become the bride of Dr. Robert C. Bryan, of Richmond.

The ceremony will be performed in the afternoon at Oak Hill, Mrs. Hamilton's estate in Howard County. Rev. C. Braxton Bryan, D. D., an uncle of the bridegroom-elect, of Petersburg, will officiate, assisted by Charles T. Stout, of Howard County.

The bride, who will enter the drawing-room with her uncle, T. Irving Adams, by whom she will be given marriage, will wear a gown of white satin, with a bodice of tulle and a court train fashioned of satin and duchesse lace. Her tulle veil will fall from a lace cap arranged with a coronet of orange blossoms. Next she will carry a bouquet of white orchids and lilies of the valley. She will wear a string of rare pearls, which are the gift of Dr. Bryan's aunt, the Misses Stewart, of Brook Hill, near Richmond.

Miss Dora Adams, who will be her niece's maid of honor, will wear a costume of orchid-colored tulle, combined with tulle of the same shade, and will carry a bouquet of the new Mrs. Russell rose, which is a deep pink lavender, shading into the pale orchid tints.

The two bridesmaids, Mrs. Horace S. Whitman, sister of the bride-elect, and a cousin, Miss Anne H. Myers, of Richmond, will have frocks of white satin, with tunic of orchid-colored tulle, and their De Medici collars will be of ermine. They will also carry Mrs. Russell roses.

Dr. Brady's Health Talks

THE MEANING OF IMMUNITY.

There is an old fable that tells of a boy who, early in childhood, was taught to carry a little calf on his back. As the boy grew older he kept carrying his pet animal with him every day, as a little girl might carry her doll. Finally he became a full grown man, and from practice he found that he had no difficulty at all in shouldering the now full grown bull and taking him home at long distance.

Everybody knows that one attack of measles or scarlet fever or smallpox usually renders the individual immune to subsequent infection by the same disease. This is due to the fact that the body, an individual living under these diseases, is able to develop a certain amount of resistance to the disease. It is this resistance that enables the body to fight off the disease when it is again exposed to it.

How Immunity is Acquired. One may acquire immunity from an attack of the particular disease by the introduction of a modified or attenuated form of the disease into the body. In vaccination and inoculation against typhoid fever, or from prolonged and intimate association with the disease. In the case of which association minute doses of the disease-poison are taken into the body in one way or another, the body develops a certain amount of resistance to the disease. This is the principle of the "antidote" applied before the dog gets into his work; it is the only reason in the world why the body does not develop active pulmonary tuberculosis. As the Germans have demonstrated beyond question, practically 100 per cent of individuals having been vaccinated against tuberculosis are immune to the disease.

Immunology is a chemical process. The chemical substance of the germ bodies or of their excretions sets up certain changes in the body cells, causing them to produce the antibodies. This is beautifully demonstrated in the everyday use of anti-toxin as a remedy for diphtheria and tetanus. Only strangely enough, there are a few misguided individuals who prefer to let their bodies be poisoned by the disease instead of letting a horse or other animal assume that burden.

Future studies in immunology—the biology and chemistry of nature's life-saving process—will bring to light still more wonderful power that those already placed in the physician's hands. We can now prevent typhoid fever, cholera, and diphtheria by the use of such God-sent antidotes. We can also find preventatives for tuberculosis and pneumonia. That, there seems no reason why we should not discover such God-sent antidotes. We can also find preventatives for such diseases as white rats, cats, dogs and guinea-pigs are more entitled to consider than man is the welfare of the human race.

Questions and Answers.

Mrs. O. H. E. writes: Will you kindly tell me whether there is any harm in "parrots" and "phythrin" as fat reducers?

Reply: If you have anybody depending on you for support, I would suggest caution in experimenting with such absolute poisons. The American Medical Association, 535 North Dearborn Street, Chicago, Ill., has an instructive pamphlet on "The Obesity Cure Fakes," which you can obtain for 10 cents.

S. C. E. writes: A girl of nine has had adenoids for two years, and there are any cure other than operation?

Reply: It depends on individual conditions. If the adenoids are affected in any way, or if the obstruction is marked, then operation is the sensible thing. If the adenoid tissue, which is normally present in a child's nose, is but slightly thickened, then local and general treatment by the physician can be successfully employed.

Parent writes: What should be the per cent of red corpuscles in the blood? Is a person whose blood tests 75 per cent very anaemic?

Reply: In health the blood contains about 5,000,000 red corpuscles per cubic millimeter, which is 100 per cent. Three million seven hundred and fifty thousand, or 75 per cent, is a moderate anemia. Perhaps the figures refer to the hemoglobin, which is usually measured by per cent ratio. Seventy-five per cent hemoglobin means a rather pronounced anemia, such as might accompany early tuberculosis or other organic disease.

B. H. asks: Is four grains of asafoetida taken with coffee each day good for a nerve tonic? Does it affect the heart in time?

Reply: Asafoetida is a mild sedative and carminative for flatulence and nervousness, but is now little used. It cannot hurt the heart or create a habit.

Only at long intervals did they draw rein to permit Hopi Jim to make reconnaissance of the lower trail that threatened the valley on the far side of the ridge pole.

Toward noon he returned in haste from the last of these surveys—scrambling recklessly down the mountain-side and throwing himself upon his horse with the advice:

"We've headed 'em—can make it now if we ride like all get-out!"

SYNOPSIS.

By arrangement with the Universal Film Manufacturing Company, it is possible to read "The Trey O'Hearts" in The Times-Dispatch and also to see it in pictures at the Superior Theatre. Synopsis of preceding chapters: This story of hearts is the death sign used by Seneca Trine in the private war waged by him through his daughter, Judith, against Alan Law, whose father, now dead, Trine blamed for the accident that made him a cripple for life. Law and his friend, Tom Barcus, propose to go on a same trip, with Seneca Trine, each other, and Rosa Lisa to his assistance. Judith's life is saved by Alan, and she falls in love with him, but scorned by him, she pursues the lovers implacably. Surviving many desperate attempts on his life, Alan learns that Rosa is being taken West by her father, and that his friend, Tom Barcus, proposes to go on a same trip, with Seneca Trine, each other, and Rosa Lisa to his assistance. CHAPTER LXX.—TO THE RESCUE.

Leaving out as he swept up, without drawing rein, the man wrapped an arm around the woman and lifted her in his arms from the ground, setting her in the saddle before him in the flutter of a heart beat.

As if the added weight were but a stimulant, his horse leapt out its stride. At this, Judith heard an oath muttered beside her and saw Marrophat looking at her revolver in his hand. The weapon swept up and to a level; but as the hammer fell, Judith's horse caromed heavily against the other, swinging it half a dozen feet aside, and deflecting the bullet helplessly.

The shock of collision was as great as that Marrophat kept his seat with difficulty. He turned toward Judith a face livid with rage.

Simultaneously, as if taking the shot as the signal for a fusillade, Judith saw Alan lean back over his horse's rump and open fire.

An instant later his companion, Barcus, imitated his example. In immediate consequence, Texas dropped reins, slumped forward over the pommel, wobbled weakly in his saddle for a moment, then losing the stirrups, pitched headlong to the ground; while Hopi Jim's horse stopped short, precipitating his rider overhead, and dropped dead.

In the ten minutes' delay necessitated by this reverse, a number of more or less innocent bystanders picked up the man Texas and carried him off to breathe his last beneath a roof. Hopi Jim picked himself up, brushed his person tolerably clear of clouds of dust and profanity, and departed in search of a mount to replace the horse that had been shot under him; and Judith sat her horse calmly, smiling sweet insolence into the exasperated countenance of Marrophat.

Incidentally the fugitives disappeared round a bend in the road that led directly to the wild and barred heart of the Painted Hills.

"It was simply an accident," was all the satisfaction Judith would afford Marrophat in return for his insistent expostulations.

But for her, he asserted, the chase would have ended with the pressure of the finger on the trigger.

"I had him covered, I tell you," he raved. "If you'd minded your horse, we'd be on our way back to your father now with the body of Alan Law!"

"You flatter yourself," she retorted. "What was it we were saying, only last night, about the quality of your marksmanship?"

Mumbling his indignation, the man swung his horse round and trotted off after Hopi Jim, leaving the girl to smile openly at his discomfiture.

But she smiled prematurely, it appeared; for in the brief interval that elapsed before his return with Hopi Jim, Marrophat contrived to persuade the bandit that Judith had been, at least indirectly, responsible for the catastrophe, with the upshot that, temporarily blinded by his fascinations by the glitter of $10,000 in the near distance, Mr. Slade maintained his distance and a deaf ear to her blandishments. The only information as to their purpose that she was able to extract from either man, when the pursuing party turned aside from the main trail, some distance from Mesa, was that Hopi Jim knew a short cut through the range, via what he termed the upper trail, by which they hoped to be able to head the fugitives off before they could gain the desert on the far side of the hills.

And the trail proved rough, narrow and tortuous, winding along the ridge-pole of an unholly wilderness. Seldom was it wide enough to permit one horseman to pass another. For hours on end they rode in single file, Hopi Jim leading Judith, and trailing the rear; while the sun mounted toward the zenith and amote the Painted Hills with such might that the arid valleys of mesquite and chaparral became cauldrons of superheated air, and the hills reeled and danced like living things in the grim orgy of some infernal danse macabre.

Only at long intervals did they draw rein to permit Hopi Jim to make reconnaissance of the lower trail that threatened the valley on the far side of the ridge pole.

Toward noon he returned in haste from the last of these surveys—scrambling recklessly down the mountain-side and throwing himself upon his horse with the advice:

"We've headed 'em—can make it now if we ride like all get-out!"
